

Find out when Family Duty Counsel is available at your location:

- legalaid.bc.ca/fdc

Family Duty Counsel

If you have a family law or child protection problem, you may qualify for free help.

Get more help

Family LawLINE

You can also get advice from a lawyer on the Family LawLINE:

604-408-2172 (Greater Vancouver)
1-866-577-2525 (elsewhere in BC)

➤ legalaid.bc.ca
family.legalaid.bc.ca
aboriginal.legalaid.bc.ca

  @legalaidbc

Legal Aid BC

Family duty counsel are lawyers paid by Legal Aid BC to provide free legal advice to help with family law and child protection problems.

You have to qualify financially. Go to legaid.bc.ca/QualifyAdvice

At all locations, we can:

- talk to you about your legal rights, your options in and out of court, and the steps involved and what to expect
- talk to you about how to negotiate and settle issues
- help you when you're preparing court documents, such as affidavits, applications, and consent orders, and look over your drafts
- coach you on how to represent yourself in court and other situations
- go to court with you to ask for an adjournment (postponement of a hearing or trial); an unopposed or consent order; or emergency orders such as protection orders and changes in parenting time, if appropriate
- refer you to other services and online resources

At some locations, we may also be able to:

- give you tips about what goes in a family law agreement
- attend a Family Settlement Conference, Family Management Conference, or Judicial Case Conference with you, if you're eligible and if this is arranged in advance

We can't:

- help you if you already have a lawyer
- become your lawyer while acting as duty counsel
- go to your trial (where both parties and witnesses appear before a judge) or any hearing with complicated issues
- help you with complex problems about property or taxes
- prepare court documents or agreements for you
- serve or accept court documents for you
- help you with legal problems outside of family or child protection law